THE EDUCATORS.

The Demands of the Colored Youth and the Nation's Indian Wards

Results of the Experiments at Carlisle and Hampton.

The Committee to Solicit Congressional Aid Ask an Appropriation of $10,000,000.

The Subject of Compulsory Education Discussed at Length.

The department of superintendence resamed its session yesterday morning at the Congregational church, President Calkins in the chair, Rev. B. G. Northop led in prayer. After a short address by the president, ien. Armstrong, of Hampton. Va., delivered, in his well known enthusiastic manner, an interesting address on aberiginal instruction. He presented the subject of educating the colored youth and the Indian wards of the nation. The speaker, from his experience, favored emphatically industrial education for both of these races. Labor with education is the salvation of the Labor with education is the salvation of the colored people, and the same as to the trouble-some aborigines. He had found after fifteen years' experience that the colored youth were anxious to learn, and that they possessed a fair enpacity.

The nation should take hold of the education of the "children of the civil revolution" with carnestness and liberality. The "Indian question," he concludes, has but one and only one solution. His education in school, shop and farm must be pushed, and the present agent system abolished. The Indian is worth saving, and can be saved.

EXPERIMENTAL EDUCATION OF THE INDIANS. Rev. B. G. Northrop, in the unavoida-ble absence of Caut. Platt, who has charge of the Indian schools at Carlisle, Pa., gave a brief history of the experiment of edu-cating the Indians, and of the great results promised from so small a beginning. It becan in 1875 with seventy-four condemned Indian prisoners sent from Fort Sill to Florida. The results were better than the most san-guine expectations had hoped. They dis-played great industry and skill. The Indian was confessedly the noblest type of the so-called heathen nations. He had a quick mind, a keen cye for observation, was brave, fearless, educable, and docile. His language had been a great drawback to his being civilized, but he was rapidly making progress in speaking English. The chiefs of the different tribes were appreciating the new order of things and displaying a growing interest in it. It was estimated that Indian wars had cost this government $500,000,000. Every Indian killed had been killed at an average cost of $100,000 each. It was therefore channer to of the Buffa. of $100,000 each. It was therefore cheaper to educate than to exterminate. There were now over 300,000 Indians in the country. Mr. Northrop gave a very interesting account of the school at Carlisio, and showed it was vary much better and more practicable to educate them at points east than upon the reservations.

Mr. Northrop was followed by Miss A. C.
Fletcher, whose account of the indian character, with her experience among them, was highly interesting.

CONGRESSIONAL AID.

The committee appointed to solicit congressional aid offered the following resolution:

Recoled, That in view of the necessity of education to the perpetuity of free institutions and of the great and disproportionate burdens which provision for universal education would impose on some of the southern states, this association expresses its conviction that it is alike the duty and the interest of the national government to extend to the several states, especially to those in which the burden and danger of illiteracy are greated, such pecuniary aid as shall enable them to provide that all the children and youth within their borders shall receive at least an elementary education. We also express our conviction that all the children and youth within their borders shall receive at least an elementary education. We also express our conviction that the flitteriety and distributed under present dittons and safeguaria through existing local effects. SCHOOL SUPERVISION. The committee appointed to solicit congres cation once tarry tried will be continued with countries and the second supervision.

The rest of the session was devoted to a consideration of the subject of school supervision, in which a majority of the delegates participated. The whole matter was arranged so as to allow statements and discussion of topics, the chief of which was the mode of licensing teachers, plans for determining the character of teachers' work, number of departs. ments in the schools, the determination of the fitness of pupils for promotion, the frequency of promotions from grade to grade or school to school, the chief means used for securing school attendance, the practical results of compulsory education, and the chief obstacles to successful results in the schools. In the course of the discussion Mr. Dwight, of Massachusetts, in considering the topic of compulsory education, said that his experience was that no school system was a success unless it secured the attendance of a vast preponderance of children affected by it. His experience had shown him there was an antagonism between the public school system on the one hand and the factory system and other kinds of business on the other hand, inasmuch as people in their eagerness to make schools had to deal with, first, the indifference of large numbers of parents. The remedy for that, he thought, was compulsory education. Secondly, the disaffection on the part of a large minority of the people as regards a secular education. This disaffection was not confined by any means to the Catholic church. Again, although paradoxical as the statement seemed, the very success which had attended the efforts of the schools was now the chief obstacle to success. Fifty years ago there was no need of a compulsory educational law. There is to-day. Again, there was too much inflexibility about the school system. And the dissociation of labor and education was dark, and no one dared venture in. They There is to-day. Again, there was too much indexibility about the school system. Mr. Newell asked Mr. Marble what truth was there in the statement recently made by Gov. Mr. Dwight answered the question by saying it wasn't necessary at all to see if any statement made by Gov. Butler was or was not true.

At the request of Gen. Eaton, Mr. Marble gave his experience with the Canadians of Worcester, some 4,000 of whom live in that city. The last time that he had anything to do with Fenianism, or kindred movements, was, according to his own statement, soon after the France-Prus-sian war, probably in 1873. He went to Dub-lin to assist in effecting some organization or other, and the meeting place was in a room back of a company tayers. When he entered back of a common tavern. When he entered the room there were several rough men present, one of whom immediately jumed up, and, addressing the general, said, 'Well, gencral, what are your plans for capturing the castle? He spoke this out in a loud tone, and Gen. McAdaras was so disgusted that he made no reply, but, putting on his hat, left the room, and did not return. The story concerning Mrs. McAdaras, as Mrs. Byrne, aiding the assessination by supplying the knives was scouted not only by her brother, but by a resident priest, who was her confessor. Both say that she is a shrinking retiring lady, and so strongly attached to her church and its teachings that the very idea of assessination would be abhorrent to her. In May last an anonymous party offered to give the chief of police here important information for the British government regarding the Phoenix park tragedy, if that government would offer a sufficient if that government would offer a sufficient reward and promise unconditional pardon to one of the conspirators, to be named by the St. Louis informer. A recent English writer gives the following illustration of the sagacity of animals:

I remember once in India giving a tame monkey a lump of sugar inside a corded bottle. The monkey was of an inquiring mind. and it nearly killed it. Sometimes, in an impulse of disgust, it would throw the bottle away out of its own reach, and then be distracted until it was given back to it. At others it would sit with a countenance of the others it would sit with a countenance of the most intense dejection, contemplating the bottled sugar; and then, as if puiling itself together for another effort at the solution, would sternly take up the problem afresh, and gaze into it. It would till it upone way and try to drink the sugar out of the neck, and then suddenly reversing it try to catch it as it fell out at the bottom.

Under the impression that it could capture it by a surprise, it kept rasping its teeth against the glass in futile bites, and, warning to the pursuit of the revolving lump, used to

Nothing availed, however, until one day a light was shed upon the problem by a jar of olives falling from the table with a crash, and the fruit rolled about in all directions. His monkeyably contemplated the catastrophe, and reasoned upon it with the intelligence of a Humboldt. Lifting the bottle high in his paws, he brought it down upon the floor with a tremendous noise smashing the glass into fragments, after which he calmly transferred the sugar to his mouth, and munched it with the sugar to his mouth, and munched it with

"I have this morning been reading over Carey's confession, and must say that it seems ridiculous to me to imagine that Capt. McAdaras is the person who is known as Number One. If the English government thinks he is the man, they can go to the Bank of English, get his Paris address, and take him to Dublin very soon. But I don't think they suspect him.
